MOVIES ... MUSIC ... BOOKS ... TV ... STAGE ...

In his follow to Little T Learns to Share (Nov. 15), Terrell Owens's pint-size alter ego will learn ... What Not to Say (spring 2007). "Honesty has been my downfall," Owens says, referring to the infamous interview in which he dissed Donovan McNabb. "If I'd answered differently, I'd still be in Philly." Next fall comes Little T Learns to Say I'm Sorry, a lesson Big T feels he's heeded. "In my mind, I've apologized to Donovan," he says. "I get irritated because people don't take my apology as an apology."

SCREEN GEMS Lucy Liu and Quentin Tarantino are exec-producing the water polo doc Freedom's Fury, which climaxes with the infamous "blood-in-the-water match" between Hungary and the USSR at the 1956 Olympics. Liu had to coax Kill Bill pal Tarantino on board: "He hadn't heard much about the Hungarian Revolution. Or water polo, for that matter!" ... Famed schlockmeister/director Roger Corman has contacted Brady Quinn about playing famed Notre Dame star George "The Gipper" Gipp in a new film. No, really.

MUSIC NOTES Troy Hudson has finished his rap album Undrafted for his Nutty Boyz Entertainment label. The single "Never Thought" is already getting radio play, but the album—featuring Twista, David Banner and The Clipse—won't drop until early '07.

TUBE NEWS CSI: Miami will take on grid-related crime to coincide with CBS's Super Bowl XLI telecast. Look for the Bengals to play a role—in the crime, anyway ... Ex-broadcaster Lisa Guerrero and hubby Scott Erickson (a former MLBer) will be pitching a baseball sitcom, Breaking Balls, about the ladies behind the players. Says Erickson: "The stories you hear are a fifth of what goes on."
